A statistician with an eye for spotting pioneering trends, Hans Rosling, a Swedish medical doctor and academic, dispels myths about the developing world. By presenting data in a captivating way, Rosling encourages millions of people to re-evaluate their understanding of the world.

Rosling, ranked as one of the world’s most 100 influential people by Time magazine in 2012, delivered a fact-based talk Sept. 9 to an engaged audience in Statler Auditorium. He spoke as the Mario Einaudi Center for International Studies’ Henry E. and Nancy Horton Bartels World Affairs Fellow.
