Language Requirements

IRM students must achieve language skills beyond the level of proficiency. For most languages, proficiency is attained by completing a course at the 2000 level, by which point the basic grammar and structure of the language will have been covered.

The requirement can be fulfilled in one of two ways:
- Demonstrated proficiency in two foreign languages, or
- Demonstrated facility in one foreign language (proficiency plus one course that uses the language to explore some aspect of a foreign culture, such as literature or film)

All language courses must be taken for a letter grade.

Study Abroad

IRM students are strongly encouraged to study abroad to bring a practical dimension to their expertise in international issues. Those who choose this option will find the requirements for the concentration highly compatible with courses taken abroad.

To learn more about programs available for study abroad, consult the Cornell Abroad Office, 300 Caldwell Hall.
(www.cuabroad.cornell.edu/)

More Information

“Through its rigorous multidisciplinary requirements and the variety of opportunities opened to enrolled students, IRM both enhanced my studies and prepare me for two internships at the State Department.”
- Mitchell Alva, minor in International Relations, 2010

Administrative Coordinator
Catherine Scott
Einaudi Center
156 Uris Hall
Ithaca, NY 14853-7601
e. IRM@einaudi.cornell.edu
t. 607-255-7645
Office hours: Refer to web page

Director
Professor Matthew Evangelista
Department of Government
320 White Hall
Ithaca, NY 14853
e. MAE10@cornell.edu
Office hours: By appointment

Website
einaudi.cornell.edu/international-relations-minor
Course Requirements

IRM students take courses throughout the university, which are grouped into four subject areas:
• International Economics and Development
• World Politics and Foreign Policy
• Transnational Processes and Policies
• Cultural Studies

Courses within these four subject areas are designated as “core” or “elective.” Students must complete eight courses selected from the four groups according to one of two options.

Option A emphasizes the politics and economics of international relations.
• One core course from each group
• One elective from each group

Option B puts greater stress on culture.
• One core course from each group
• One elective from either Group 1 or Group 2
• One elective from Group 3, one elective from Group 4, and one additional elective from either Group 3 or Group 4.

In either option, students should ensure that they acquire familiarity with more than one geographic region or country.

Core Courses

Group 1: International Economics and Development
ECON 4510: International Trade Theory and policy
ECON 4520: International Monetary Theory and Policy

Group 2: World Politics and Foreign policy
GOVT 1817: Making Sense of World Politics

Group 3: Transnational Politics and Policies
DSOC 3230: Gender and Global Change

Group 4: Cultural Studies
ANTHR 1400: The Comparison of Cultures

Elective Courses

Consult the IRM web page for a list of Fall 2017 electives. einaudi.cornell.edu/international-relations-minor